Senate debates fiscal questions

by Gary Pearce
Staff writer

Last night the GSS voted overwhelmingly not to let the student body decide whether the Wilde-Stein Club should be funded.

"This is a matter of fiscal policy, not morals," said Jim Pastorelli (Dunn). The federal government doesn't send the defense budget out to a national referendum. We can decide this in the cabinet."

"We're not discussing merits of Wilde-Stein, but whether students should decide on funding of this controversial group," said Rob Morton, president of SEA and a co-sponsor of the bill.

Those who favored the bill stressed the need for the students' opinions to be heard, but Kathryn Knight (Est-Col-Bal) stressed that all the referendum would show would be "how many people like gays and how many don't."

Others felt that once policy began being decided because of prejudice to minorities, the whole system would be a farce.

Theresa Bridges, who shares an office with the Wilde-Stein Club, said the "provide a valuable service in educating the community about themselves." She and her husband came to speak because they felt "no single group should be singled out to be put up to referendum."

The GSS also debated lengthily on whether The New Edition should be funded.

Dave Pritchard, general manager of The New Edition, questioned the cabinet's complete turn-around in support and showed a petition with 1600 student signatures petitioning the paper.

Many senators thought the newspaper served a valuable function both in covering campus issues more in-depth and as providing competition for the Maine Campus, thereby increasing the quality of both papers.

"It takes a while for any business to get on its feet," stressed Charles Mercer (Aroostook), "and we should give them a chance."

"It's useful for getting government news in the paper accurately," said Jim Bealieu.

The GSS finally decided to table the resolution until senators had a chance to review its charter.

Another controversial issue involved a referendum to raise the Student Activity Fee from $12.50 per semester to $15 per semester. The GSS, in a vote of 27-7-3, sent the resolution to referendum.

Most senators feared the effect lack of additional revenue would have on smaller groups. Without additional revenue, some groups would lose money or not be funded at all.

Student Senator Jim Pastorelli of Dunn Hall spoke against sending the issue of Wilde-Stein funding to a student referendum at Tuesday night's senate meeting. He called the Wilde-Stein Club "a matter of fiscal policy, not morals." [photo by Gail Brooks.]

Pay increase called 'pat on the back'

by Ernie Clark
Staff writer

Several cabinet members expressed discontent yesterday with self-proposed cabinet salary increases, saying that members are "patting each other on the back."

Senators Jim Hewes and Bill Randall said that in light of group funding cutbacks and a 1980-81 student government budget that is projected to show a surplus of only $164, these cabinet salary increases (which must be approved by the General Student Senate) are unwarranted.

"We are increasing salaries for cabinet members, and we are cutting funding for groups," Hewes said. "People enter student government as volunteers; they shouldn't expect to make a great deal of money."

Salary increases already approved by the cabinet include salaries for Rob Morton, SEA chairman, Bill Lomas, president of the UM Fraternity Board, SEA head ushers, and Student Legal Services paralegals. The salaries for the SEA and UMFB presidents represent an increase from the 1979-80 rates, when most cabinet salaries were cut, but are equal or less than the salaries paid to these board members two years ago.

Randall said he favored the removal of these salary increases in order to keep the budget the same as the 1979-80 budget, and so that an activity fee increase will not be needed.

"Hopefully, the cabinet members will go along with me," Randall said.

Randall also said he has changed his vote regarding a pay raise for SLS paralegals so that he now opposes the proposed $100 raise for paralegals.

"I've made the change to be consistent with my other votes and budget feelings," he said.

Cabinet member Roger Brodeur defended the cabinet increases, saying there are some increases and some decreases. He cited the example of the Student Community Service Board chairman, who was voted a $100 salary cut.

"People are criticizing quite a bit about each department's budget," Brodeur said. "I don't think it's a case of patting each other's back."

WMEB cuts air time to six hours daily

Tom Kevorkian, station manager of WMEB-FM, proposed Tuesday night to cut station air time to six hours daily in protest of budget cuts. [photo by Gail Brooks]

by Mike Finnegan
Staff writer

WMEB Station Manager Tom Kevorkian proposed last night to cut the station's broadcast services to six hours a day.

The proposal was passed by more than half of the station's members, according to executive staff member John Dodge.

The meeting of WMEB's staff members was held to ascertain ways money could be raised to make up the $3,950 the student government cabinet proposed be cut from the budget.

Federal Communication Commission regulations require that a station of WMEB's size must operate on a daily basis for at least six hours. The measure proposed by Kevorkian would take WMEB off the air for much of the day and broadcast from midnight to 6 a.m. for the rest of the year.

"Why don't we leave the programming as it is? If you are still angry, let's protest after we have exhausted all other means of raising funds," Kathy Hodgdon said.

"The risks of following such a course of action are not just affecting the station this

★ A taxi cab driver from Bangor reported Saturday that someone had asked for a ride to BCC, and upon arrival, the person jumped swiftly out of the cab and ran into the bushes without paying the $8.25 fare. Police are investigating the incident.

Professor criticizes U.S. energy policy

by Brian Farley
Staff writer

"Everyone says that we have an energy crisis, and everyone has solutions up the wazoo, but who has actually stated the nature of the problem?" asked Dr. Thomas Eastler, UMaine Farmington professor of environmental geology.

In his hour-long lecture and slide presentation in the English/Math building,

Eastler said that Americans "should have a different perspective of what the energy questions are instead of looking for easy solutions."

"We are a junkie of a country, and we want instant gratification," he said, "and there are just too many of us doing too many things. We should stop and realize that there are no easy solutions and also that there are no easy questions."

The professor criticized energy experts, likening them to physicians that diagnose sick patients without examining what makes them sick.

"What are the facts?" he asked his audience. "Either we have an oil shortage or we don't. One way or the other, we're in trouble. We should be asking about our gluttony and overconsumption. The magnitude of our oil usage is not perceived by most people."

Eastler examined various aspects of the energy problem, and was critical towards many of them.

—On the Alaska Pipeline: "It raised

FOR FALL 1980! MS 101 ANALYTIC THINKING MWF 9:00, 125 Lengyl Gym

A course designed to develop logical reasoning, a facility in algebraic computations and insights into problems through geometric interpretation. A twofold objective of this course is overcome mathematics apprehensions while increasing quantitative thinking abilities.

MS 101 is intended for student majoring in the social sciences, humanities, education, or business and those adults returning to the university who have not had a course in mathematics recently. Many of these students plan to apply for graduate or professional schools and are required to score well on certain admission tests, e.g., GRE, LSAT, GMAT. The Educational Testing Service, which furnishes many of these examinations, includes items which test the student's power of logical reasoning, skills in algebraic manipulations, and ability to interpret problems geometrically. Many otherwise intelligent students are woefully deficient when confronted with problems which requires logical, quantitative thought. One of the causes of this weakness is mathematics apprehension.

Maine plays host to annual 'Wildlife Bowl'

Syracuse (S.U.N.Y.) now owns the traveling trophy of the "Wildlife Bowl," an annual competition among wildlife students of the northeast in which four-man teams answer questions on natural history in a "college bowl" format.

S.U.N.Y. defeated Penn State in the final round 75-50, earning S.U.N.Y. the trophy for one year.

The wildlife bowl is the highlight event of the annual Wildlife Society Conclave, hosted this at the China Lake Conference Center on April 10-13.

Maine, the defending wildlife bowl champions, was ineligible to compete this year since the host school must write and edit the questions. Maine has won the bowl for the past 10 of 11 years, giving up the trophy only once before in 1971 when it last hosted the conclave.

Other schools competing this year were Cornell, U.R.I., U.V.M., and U.Mass.

Over 70 wildlife students and faculty attended the three-day conclave. Besides the bowl, Maine's out-of-state guests were treated to two guest speakers, an all day trip to Acadia National Park on Friday, a morning trip to Swan Island Saturday, and a banquet and a contra dance on Saturday evening.

Friday night's guest speaker was Dr. Michael Zagata, former UMO professor of wildlife currently serving as program development officer with the National Academy of Sciences. Dr. Zagata spoke on "Future challenges in renewable resources management."

Following the wildlife bowl, on Saturday afternoon, Harry Hodgdon, Field Director of the Wildlife Society, spoke and answered questions from students and faculty. Hodgdon stressed the need for more wildlife students and faculty to take an active role in the Wildlife Society and its Student Chapters.

Saturday night's contra dance was the finale to a fun and educational weekend for all who attended. Said on Penn State wildlifer of his hosts, "Maine really knows how to put on a conclave. Everyone who helped plan and organize this event deserves to be congratulated on an outstanding job."

Those faculty members and students attending graduation exercises on May 17 who have not made arrangements for academic regalia (caps and gowns) should do so immediately to ensure availability. Place your ORDERS AT THE TEXTBOOK ANNEX or by calling 7311 or 7475.

UMO's contracted supplier for academic regalia is Cotrell and Leonard, Inc. who is currently involved in a labor dispute. Anyone who objects to being supplied by this firm may request an alternate supplier at the time their order is placed.

Students who placed their order on Monday and Tuesday of Senior Week or others who may wish to change their orders may do so by calling in person or by phoning 7241. Payment is due at the time orders are picked up. Most orders should be available at the Textbook Annex 2-4 days prior to graduation day.

A slice of the pie

This week's consumer watchdog award goes to Jim Hewes and Bill Randall.

Take a bow, men. You seem to be two of the very few that are expressing an interest in how money is spent around here. Our money.

This isn't a weekly award. Maybe it should be, though.

For the past few weeks, the pages of this newspaper have been flooded with stories of how tight student government funding was getting. It became a matter of priorities; which group was more worthy of a chunk of the pie.

Well, guess who's getting a pretty fair slice of that pie? That's right, student government itself.

While most people are beginning to feel the ax (i.e. The New Edition, WMEB-FM, etc.), the cabinet apparently feels it is time certain people got a raise.

Generous of them, huh? During a recession, when money becomes tight, isn't it funny how government itself is one of the last to feel the pinch.

Well, a few are standing up for the students, as you saw in a story in today's paper. Jim Hewes, who mentioned the term "patting each other on the back" and Bill Randall, who was opposed to hiking the student activity fee, have at least taken a stand and made their feelings known.

Wouldn't it be nice if this was the attitude of the majority? One can only hope it will spread, but that is doubtful.

One of the hardest things to do is deny yourself a raise. Somehow it implies you are not doing a good job, even if you are. Consequently, a new situation has developed where cabinet members have allowed certain pay increases at the expense of other groups.

Hewes said some of the raises were approved as an incentive to keep people working in student government. Pay people more and you'll keep them and get them to work harder.

Hewes went so far as to say students should be working for the student government for the experience on a volunteer basis. He believes the experience should be enough.

That'll never happen. Hewes is commendable for high ideals, but it is unrealistic to think people who can handle student government capably will donate their time consistently without pay.

However, they are making a grave error in the eyes of their constituency to "pat themselves on the back" at a time like this.

Here's a hard idea to get used to, cabinet members, but working in student government can be described in two words—public servant.

There won't be much money, never any fanfare, and more likely than not, you'll get nothing but criticism. It's not a fun world unless you're prepared to sacrifice at your own expense for the people you represent.

Granting pay raises at a time when other groups are trying to cope with the loss of funding will and can bring only criticism from any direction.

On this particular issue, Bill Randall and Jim Hewes seem to be the only two who are sticking up for the interests of all the students.

I hope they succeed and I hope the raises go down the tube until we can afford them at everybody's best interest, instead of your own.

S.M.

Anne Lucey

Red tape

If you don't know what red tape is by now, you should have it figured out by the end of this week.

This week is registration week, or better known as five days of bureaucratic bungling. In reality, it is the students who bungle while the administrators sit back and laugh.

Any student who wishes to be a student next fall must decide now which courses he wants to take five months from now.

Students are expected to plan their course of study, yet the trustees and presidents and whoever else makes the grand decisions don't even know when the damn semester is going to begin or end.

But not only must a student decide which elective or requirement he has to get over and done with, he must also trudge all the way over the department of his major to obtain a computer registration card.

'College, an environment of supposed independence and maturity, is a paradox.'

Without folding, spindling, or mutilating this passport to fall semester, the student must legibly fill in the blanks with the appropriate course title, course identifier, section number and credit number.

Listing these courses, of course, is no guarantee you will get into these classes, so alternate courses must be listed on the flip side of the card.

Every procedure up to this point is relatively simple. The tough part is squeezing in an appointment with your advisor, and when you do see him, holding your breath while he reads what you've signed up for.

It's crazy, you know. Students are old enough to be drafted to fight a war, but they can't even decide for themselves what courses they want to take and when they want to take them.

If Peggy Sue wants to take eight semesters of advanced bongo drums, why the hell can't she do it?

College, an environment of supposed independence and maturity, is a paradox. The day a high school or transfer student is admitted to UMO, he is assigned a guardian angel, sometimes called an advisor. The only thing he's usually good for is his signature.

And when a student gets that prized John Hancock on his prized computer card, he is in the home stretch.

All he must do now is hike over to the dean's office where a surrogate dean rubber-stamps the signature of the real dean.

Pre-registration is completed now, but the red tape has only begun—wait until add-drop week.

Congratulations, chancellor

To the Editor:

Congratulations to Chancellor McCarthy for his new calendar plan. He has finally found a solution to that annual problem of overcrowding in the dorms. The proposed plan will surely eliminate the freshman triple and the student forced to live at BCC. Why wasn't this wonderful plan thought of sooner? Surely the education of a few thousand students is a small sacrifice to make to insure on campus housing for all. It's nice to see that the complaints of overcrowding in the past have finally reached the administration. It goes to show that we, the students, can solve these problems if we just make enough noise.

Save this professor

To the Editor:

I am very concerned about a current situation in the sociology department. Professor Saundra Gardner's contract is not being renewed due to a lack of university funding. This will result in a lower quality education and the loss of a very qualified professor.

As a student paying an always increasing tuition, I realize that the economic situation is a serious problem, but I am more concerned with the quality of education I will be receiving. I believe that as a member of an institution of higher learning, I deserve the most comprehensive education available and that, especially as a sociology major, this includes the woman's perspective. Sandy Gardner, in her courses on the family and on sex roles, more than adequately provides this view point. She is also, as a professor, an excellent role model of the potential a woman today has.

Declared sociology majors, as of January 1980, include 31 female and 8 male seniors and 34 female and 1 male junior. With a greater number of women majors, the need for a female sociology professor becomes even more necessary. It is paradoxical to have the majority of sociology majors women, while the faculty is predominantly male. By letting Professor Gardner leave, both the men and women in the department will suffer. Students who take sociology courses as electives will also be deprived.

Sandy has designed, as a departmental project, a course geared for men and women, on the changing sex roles today. This course has offered great insight to the sociology major as well as the non-major. If Professor Gardner leaves, the course will be lost; no one is qualified to teach it.

Sandy Gardner's ability as an instructor is without question, excellent. She incorporates reading material with student opinion, reflecting her concern for her student's inputs and ideas. She is available and more than willing to assist a student in both academic and personal matters.

Professor Gardner's quality as an educator and person must not be overlooked in this matter. However, of equal importance is the student and her/his education. It is unfortunate that a well-rounded education, that should include options for everyone, may be sacrificed to economics.

Cynthia Barnes

New ideas on the calendar issue

To the Editor:

For a while now, I've read articles and commentaries about the proposed change in the school year. Barely hidden behind the student's anger and indignation, I see worry and doubt. At least, that's what I'm feeling about all this: I'm afraid that this proposal will be shoved down our throats. Moreover, I'm afraid that most students will give up the fight before it's lost and thereby make it easier for the chancellor and the board of trustees to decide on an issue that affects us students without asking us, as a whole, for input. Obviously, the administration is getting opinions now, whether they like it or not, but I'm writing to share with the students and faculty some questions and ideas that have come to my mind that others haven't already written about.

The first thing that bothered me about this proposal is that the whole mess is being brought up so late in the school year. With 60 days to sit on it, Mr. McCarthy could wait until the end of this semester before deciding. If he decides to implement this idea, anyone who doesn't want the type of education that the shorter year would provide and wants to transfer out to get a good education just can't do it. It's too late to apply to other schools. Also, students and teachers and others concerned have very little time to offer their input since the semester is winding up soon. When May rolls around, who will have time to think about this proposal for next year when finals and graduation will be days away? And 60 days is just too short a time to discuss (if we'll be allowed discussion!) such a drastic change in the university. I think that this matter should be taken up next fall and, if the proposal goes through, that it would go into effect the year after. There is no easy solution, apparently, so we shouldn't be so hasty. After all, our education is at stake.

What also annoyed me is the way the proposal was presented. I can see that, without the expected savings, tuition, room, and board hikes would be greater, but I don't like the inference behind the fact that the calendar change and the present increases are "interwoven." To me, that's an ultimatum, saying, "Accept it, OR ELSE!"

As for the particulars of the change, those longer class periods and that six-day week won't increase learning for the students. How much does Mr. McCarthy think the students can absorb in the present 50 and 75 minute classes, let alone the proposed 75 and 90 minute periods? He should ask the students how much studying they can handle before they have mental overloads. He should ask the teachers how long they can lecture without becoming hoarse and he should ask the psychologists exactly how the learning process works and exactly how much time it takes to learn.

It was also suggested that the new school year would allow students more time to work and earn money for school. I discussed this with some students and they said that they'd just take the two extra months as a vacation and then start work in June as usual. And for those of us who want to or who must work, I don't see how Maine's economy could absorb even just resident students for six months. I can't get a good job to support myself until June at the earliest, and I'm not even working in the tourist industry. April just isn't the month for hiring seasonal help.

Another question I have is about how much it will cost, in time and effort as well as money, to make the switch? I think that the logistics of how to integrate the whole University must be changed to make the switch. Then the juggling to fit all the classes in with one another will begin. After that, the individual course's content and the amount of material covered must be altered to fit the new time periods and the overall time for delivery of the course. Maybe even the teachers will have to learn new ways of teaching and certainly, the students will have to try to learn new ways of learning. The whole problem becomes an avalanche of problems.

Finally, I don't see how the university could close down completely from April to October. Maybe the students wouldn't be here, but the whole administration probably will be. And then there are the teachers doing research, the summer school, and all the other projects. I feel that the University is here for the express purpose of providing the best possible atmosphere in which the students and teachers can get together to learn and teach. Instead, I see the administration making the process nearly impossible by making the conditions intolerable.

Sincerely,
Chris D'Amico

Judo spirit

To the Editor:

I'd like to make some additions to the fine article by Nancy Storey on the University of Maine Judo Club win Wednesday, April 9. The UMO Judo Club now has approximately 50 members. Many of these people are into judo as an outside activity which gives them a chance to get away from the grind and participate in an unusual sport. Of this group, an average of 14 travel around New England in the form of a team competing against the likes of UConn, UMass, and area clubs.

The spirit of judo is growing here at UMO and across New England. In 1979 alone, the number of people involved in judo doubled in the state of Maine. There are 81 clubs in New England. The UMO Judo Club has increased in size by an average of three people a week in the past three months and we hope to continue. Practices are open to all students; new people start every week. The practices are 6-8 p.m. Tuesday, 6-8 p.m. Friday, and 1-3 p.m. Sunday.

Our success in recent meets in Enfield, Conn. and in Worcester, Mass. are a direct reflection of the quality of our instructor/coach Ramon Ancho Jr. This Sunday at noon the UMO Judo Club will host the first annual Downeast Judo Tournament in "The Pit". Some of the best judo competitors in New England will be in attendance. Spectators are welcome.

County deputies fired after three day strike

BANGOR--Twenty-two Penobscot County Sheriff's Deputies were fired this afternoon, just hours after they handed in their resignations.

Meanwhile, arrangements are being made to transfer the 62 inmates being held in the county jail at Bangor.

The firings were announced by County Commissioners after the deputies resigned en masse. The resignations were to take effect at midnight, the day after a judge ordered the deputies to halt their three-day strike and return to work.

Sheriff Otis Labree, who supports the deputies in their pay dispute with the Commissioners, said he's bitter at the latest developments.

Labree had accepted the resignations of 22 deputies, but refused to accept those of five other members of his department who make up his administrative staff.

During the day, Labree met with representatives of 11 other sheriff's departments in Maine to arrange temporary quarters for the inmates. Labree also has been in contact with Governor Joseph Brennan's office.

In addition to operating the jail, the sheriff's department conducts patrols on rural roads in Penobscot County and operates a countywide communications center.

The deputies have been seeking a 10 percent cost-of-living pay increase. At present, starting deputies receive $154 a week.

Quebec's sovereignty to be decided in May

Khomeini urges Pope to set the U.S. straight

IRAN--Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini has urged Pope John Paul to warn the U.S. government to mend its ways. In a message to the Pope, Khomeini accused the United States of "tyrannies, imposition of force and plundering." Khomeini was replying to a weekend message from the Pope voicing concern over the deteriorating relations between Tehran and Washington.

Red Cross delivers hostages' messages

WASHINGTON--The State Department says it's confident that there are indeed 50 Americans being held hostage in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. But Spokesman Hodding Carter refused to say whether the department has been in touch with International Red Cross representatives who visited the captives yesterday. Red Cross headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, says it agreed to a demand by the militants holding the embassy not to disclose the total number of hostages.

Meanwhile, messages from the captives to their families are already being relayed by the Red Cross, through its U.N. Mission in New York. The messages were carried to Geneva by one of the Red Cross officials, and then transmitted to New York.

Russia sends landing force to Indian Ocean

Pentagon officials say a combat force of Soviet Marines has arrived in the Indian Ocean aboard Russia's biggest amphibious assault ship. It's said that at least 400 marines, as well as personnel carriers and other equipment of the type used to support a landing force, are aboard. Officials say there's no indication as to what Russia may be planning to do with them.

The United States has had about 1,800 marines in the Indian Ocean area since mid-March.

UMO judo tournament a success

by Nancy Storey
Staff writer

Memorial Gym was the site for the first Annual UMO Downeast Invitational Judo Tournament Sunday night. Competitors of all ages, from five years to the mid-thirties, competed in various classes.

The classes ranged from girl's nine years old and under to men's senior black belt competition, with three trophies given out for each of the 31 different classes.

The UMO judo team captured the first team trophy as they out-fought other athletes from areas such as Manchester, N.H., Springfield, Mass., and Portland.

A crowd of about 200 people was on hand to witness the biggest judo event that has ever taken place within the state borders.

Thirteen people from the UMaine Judo Club took individual trophies home, placing in the senior men and women's white belt classes. Among these winners, John Donasvitch, George Burdick, Jeff Jarvis, and Walter Shulpin all took first places in their classes.

Many family members participated in the meet, indicating that judo is becoming a "family" sport. The number of competitors who competed in the meet showed judo's popularity, another up-and-coming sport.

The Nichols brothers, Brett[L] and Brian[R] square off in last Sunday's UMO Downeast Judo Tournament held in Memorial Gym. Maine captured a first place trophy in the tournament.

If you want to run cross country next semester for the blue and white of UMaine, an important meeting will be held Thursday, April 17 at 4:45 p.m. in classroom A in the military department, which is next to the indoor track. It's a meeting for both men and women, and anyone who is unable to attend should contact coach Jim Ballinger at 7696.

Women's track

by Ed Crockett
Staff Writer

The women's track club participated in the UMass Relays this weekend and fared rather well. Scores were not kept in this meet and any team could enter. High schools as well as colleges competed in the AAU meet.

"Everyone enjoyed themselves and we did pretty well considering it was our first competition," said club President Gwynn Bown.

Bown had an outstanding meet, placing in both the javelin and discus events. She tossed the javelin 143 feet 10 inches to take second, and finished third in the discus with a heave of 114 feet 11 inches.

Other scorers were Marsha Cook who captured a fourth in the shot put and the medley relay team, which also finished fourth. The quarter of Melanie Adams, Stacy Cain, Carol Robets, and Mary Peterson ran legs of 220, 110, and 440 yards in the medley.

Ruggers tie UVM

by Sean Brodrick
Staff writer

The UMO men's rugby club battled the University of Vermont to a 4-4 tie Saturday afternoon. In the first half, both clubs went pointless but Maine was the first to score when, in the opening minutes of the second half, Cory Johnson got the first try for four points. After a long struggle, UVM came back to score at the end of the second half and that ended action for the game.

The course of play was slowed by a hard rain that turned the playing field into a swamp and the ball akin to a greased pig. However, the UMO ruggers were more dissatisfied with the referee than with the weather.

There was a dispute over the rules when the referee called a penalty on the Maine club for "yelling on the field." The reaction from UMO players was one of disbelief.

"Yelling on the field?" said club member Ray Salmon incredulously. "Show me that rule in a rule book. All that happened was some of our guys were shouting 'push' in the huddle."

semester; but if this thing backfires on us, we might not have a radio station next year," Charlie Gould said.

WMEB members' concern over the proposed budget cuts came following Kevorkian's budget proposal and the subsequent budget cuts last Sunday by the student cabinet. Kevorkian had revised WMEB's budget prior to the presentation "eliminating any padding." Kevorkian said he was hurried from bed Sunday in order to get to the cabinet meeting and presented figures of WMEB operating expenses, underestimating the station's needs.

Kevorkian, in effect, presented the student cabinet with a budget request that left no room for budget cuts.

"They are (student cabinet) playing by their set of rules and we are playing by our set of rules. The consequence of not playing by their rules is unexpected budget cuts," Mike Saltz said.

"If we can get money from student senate, President Allen or Harold Alfond, I think we should go and get it," Hodgdon said.

"We just can't expect everything to be handed to us on a silver platter. If we need more money, some of us should get to work and raise the money," Vigue added.

Who will do what, when and where to raise money is not certain. The station manager or perhaps all members of WMEB will go before the student cabinet today asking for $2,500 in athletic programming now pending and also an increase needed for 1981 summer operating costs.

WMEB is willing to go along with salary budget cuts and being denied $1,000 for food and lodging on road games. But to expect the radio station to raise $3,950 through fund raising to meet operating expenses and insure the same level of programming is unreasonable, Kevorkian said.

If the proposed budget is not met, WMEB will have to make programming cutbacks, Kevorkian said. "We are forced to cut our own throats. No more road game broadcasts, no more off the beaten path and no more summer broadcasts."

Student organizations should accept the responsibility of funding an organization, Kevorkian said. "Everything was trimmed and slashed; I threw out a lot of things and went over the budget three times."

—On military implications: "Until the U.S. faces up to the realities of the worldwide natural distribution we will continue to operate under the false impression that the U.S. can be domestically self-sufficient in resources, an impression that may have vast military implications."

—On the energy consumption of Americans: "We use an awful lot of the world's resources for six percent of the population. There's no engineer's plan that is going to feed us if we continue our gluttony."
