Club debt responsibility questioned

by Glen Chase
Staff writer

Whose responsibility are debts run up by clubs at UMO?

The UMO student government cabinet is unsure and Student Government President David Spellman said he is going to seek an opinion from Chalmers Hardenburgh of Student Legal Services.

Spellman, speaking at the cabinet's regular weekly meeting said, "What we are doing is policy" in referring to a request from the UMO Lacrosse Club to reallocate $2,100 to pay off debts incurred by the group.

"Technically, I don't think we are responsible, but who is?" Spellman said.

Kevin Colley, a lacrosse club representative, said the club originally owed more than $3,100 to the Brine Company for equipment and to the University Motor Pool.

The debt to the Brine Company has been reduced to $1,000. Colley estimated the club can operate for the rest of this semester on approximately $800.

Spellman said he was worried about other groups accruing large debts and whether or not student government is responsible for them. Any further action was tabled until the legal situation is cleared up.

In other action, the cabinet reallocated $610 in the budget of the UMO Fraternity Board, approving an additional $500 for Greek Weekend and $110 to be used in a tax workshop for the fraternities.

The money was reallocated from monies planned for this year's Winter Carnival and a conference that Board President William Lomas declined to attend.

The cabinet also started to review the proposed budget for Student Activities and Entertainment. The cabinet also tabled for review a proposed charter, outlining the New Edition's relationship with student government.

A question of survival

by Glen Chase
Staff Writer

With the fate of UMO's elm trees up in the air, the director of the Dutch Elm Disease research program called the problem a question of aesthetics vs. tree survival.

Richard J. Campana, professor of botany and forest pathology, said his goal as a biologist was tree survival, while the goal of the grounds and services department is that of homogeneity on the UMO landscape.

"I would like to have the elms forever because they are a testimony to our research," Campana said. He added "the fat will be in the fire" this June if any of the trees become infected with the disease.

Campana said Associate Professor James Swasey, a landscaping consultant to the grounds and services department, will look on any infection this summer as a cause to remove a tree. On the other hand, Campana said he would "look at it as a challenge to save it."

"The elms on campus are considered to be healthy where the Dutch Elm Disease is concerned," he said. He added that some elms may have the disease that he doesn't know about yet while others have been saved through treatment.

Campana has been doing research on the disease for approximately 20 years. He said he had "kind of adopted on-campus elms as an outdoor research laboratory" with the "excellent cooperation" of the grounds and services department.

In the past 20 years, Campana estimated he has been provided with approximately $200,000 for research on the disease. Most of this money has come from federal and state grants, in addition to some money from private sources.

"Who pays what is not terribly important," said Campana. "The important thing is the tremendous amount of information we've gotten out of the trees." He said numerous papers and theses have been written from information gathered in research on the trees.

Campana said while he did recognize the inevitability of the elms removal, it does "throw a monkey wrench" into his research.

However, Campana said he was one of those who urged the university to underplant the elms with another kind of tree. He said at the time, there hadn't been enough research to know whether or not the trees could be saved.

The ash trees on the mall were planted in 1973 and recently have started being overshadowed by the elms.

"Last fall, we (Campana and Swasey) came to the conclusion that many of the elms could be kept by a little judicious pruning," Campana said.

Campana, 61, said he has a "feeling" that once he retires, the Dutch Elm Disease program on campus will end because there is no economic need for the elm and the university is not likely to get another forest pathologist who is preoccupied with elms.

Cabinet member William Lomas defended the UMO Lacrosse club, saying the group had "cut their own throat" in putting in an effort to take care of their debt of $2,100. [photo by Donna Sotomayor]

Student senate meeting sparks heavy criticism

by Stephen Oliver
Staff writer

Tuesday night's student senate defeat of a proposal which would have allowed the student body to decide the issue of Panhellenic representation on the cabinet has received wide-spread criticism.

"Most senators made totally irrational arguments and voted only on their emotions," Student Government President David Spellman said Wednesday. "It's unfortunate and really bothers me the way the senate acted."

Former Student Government Vice President Steve Bucherati also criticized the senate vote.

"I was embarrassed and disgusted," Bucherati said. "I used to be tremendously proud of the student senate, but right now I'm glad to be out of it."

Bucherati noted that only a month and a half ago, the senate sent two questions to referendum, dealing with a possible olympic boycott and draft registration.

"However, when it comes to an issue that is of vital importance right here on campus, the senate feels it's unimportant," he said.

Bucherati also commented that administrators, Thomas Aceto, Dwight Rideout and Prof. Paul Camp, all present at the meeting, probably left with a negative feeling about the senate.

"It will be a long while before the senate gains respect in the eyes of the administration," he said.

Panhellenic Council President Lauren Hendrickson echoed Bucherati's feelings.

"I feel very bad about the defeat mostly because, as a student, I felt like I was slapped in the face," Henderson said.

She called it another example of the UMusical group gives driving performance

by Brian Farley
Staff writer

Here's a new definition for Webster's dictionary. 20th Century Music Ensemble: a UMO musical group that combines talent and drive to produce toe-tapping, hand clapping swing, wailing blues, and funky rock music, making it all look like fun.

Under the direction of Don Stratton and Associate Director Bill Picher, the ensemble "wowed" a receptive audience at Hauck Auditorium Tuesday night with a band" era tunes, some jazz, some blues, and even some "Ease on Down the Road" funk-rock that had everyone tapping and clapping and nodding their heads in approval.

Rounding out the program were vocals by Cathy Cyr and Judy Labbe, who both excelled. Labbe's powerful voice complimented Stratton's arrangements of "Nine Times Up" and "Summertime." Especially good was Cyr's own beautifully flowing arrangement of the Loggins-Messina song, "The House at Pooh Corner," which received an enthusiastic round of applause.

In addition to Stratton's songs, compositions from local songwriters Bill McCarthy, John Norton, and Frank Picher were woven into the program.

lively program that featured the musical works of Gershwin, Kenton, and Don Stratton.

The real stars of the show, however, were the musicians themselves. Several outstanding talents were spotlighted throughout the evening. Especially well received were solos by Stratton and Picher on trumpet, Al Bernardo on sax, Steve Soucy on trombone, Tom White on guitar, Don Holder on bass, and Donna Langdon on drums. Perhaps the most impressive talent of the evening was Bev Bellai, whose fluid clarinet solos in Artie Shaw's "Concerto for Clarinet" earned her a well deserved standing ovation.

The program featured several "big

The evening certainly ended with a bang. The last scheduled song was Stratton's "UMO Blues," a tune that has a beat not unlike "The Stripper." That only made the audience hungry for more as they demanded an encore. And what an encore they got. A driving rendition of "Mr. C's Boogie," a tune borrowed from the Tonight Show's musical library, was a perfect choice. As Don Stratton strutted around the stage wailing away on his trumpet, one could sense the satisfaction he was getting from the golden music his ensemble put forth that evening. Almost before the song was over, the audience was on its feet, cheering and confirming that Stratton and everyone at UMO do indeed have something to be really proud of: 20th Century Music Ensemble.

DLS hosts A-bomb kid: Author, inventor, leader

by Gail Clough
Staff writer

A Princeton University graduate who designed an atomic bomb for a physics class will speak tonight in Hauck Auditorium at 8:00. The speech is part of UMO's Distinguished Lecture Series.

John Aristotle Phillips, also known as "The A-Bomb Kid," earned international prominence in 1976, while he was a student at Princeton. Phillips designed an atomic bomb using information from publicly available documents. His purpose was to demonstrate the dangers of nuclear proliferation and nuclear energy.

Phillips is a highly regarded expert on American energy policy and strategic military policy. He has spoken before business, political, and university groups across the country. Phillips has also appeared on several talk shows, including Phil Donahue, Mike Douglas, Good Morning America, and Today.

He has been featured on the cover of Parade Magazine, in Time and Newsweek, and has written for Esquire, Science Digest, Omni, and The Nation.

Phillips graduated from North Haven High School in North Haven, Conn. in 1973. He studied at the University of California at Berkeley before attending Princeton. Phillips graduated from Princeton with a B.S. degree in Aero-space and Mechanical Engineering in 1978.

A year ago Phillips became president of the Connecticut Consumer Association. He is also president of Aristotle, Inc., a company he founded to develop and market innovative micro-processor-based health and consumer products.

senate not giving the student body enough credit.

"Our only force now is to get enough signatures to force a student referendum and we're seriously considering that," Hendrickson said.

Student Senator Kathy Knight of Colvin Hall called the defeat a result of "personal prejudice."

"The senators just voted the way they wanted to," she said. "If they had considered their constituents, it would have gone to referendum."

Knight said she felt the major problem was that the senate feels they have a great deal of power, and not the students.

"We were there for a very serious reason, but most of the time, the senate was in total chaos," she said. "I'm very disappointed."

"It was really bad," Hendrickson added. "I couldn't believe what a zoo that was."

Three ring politics

The student senators are developing a serious flaw. They are taking themselves too seriously, making themselves more important than they really are. And in doing so, they are coming off looking like clowns.

The senate has been voicing opinions on a variety of subjects recently. They make resolutions saying what the students want. Sometimes they ask the students. Sometimes they don't.

When they were trying to decide the vital UMO issue of whether the United States should participate in the Moscow Summer Olympics or what our position on the draft was, they added some referenda questions to the student government election ballots.

Tuesday night, they showed students and several of UMO's administrators that they were not all seriousness.

By a vote of 21 to 12, one vote short of the two-thirds needed to pass the question, the senate decided the Panhellenic Council should not be a member of the cabinet. They denied the students the chance to make the decision.

Apparently this was not as big an issue to the senate as the Moscow Olympics is.

One of the senators who voted no on the question was Roger Brodeur. Brodeur represents Balentine, Colving and Estabrooke Halls. At least that's what his title says.

It doesn't seem that he took into account the viewpoints of the 30 or more sorority women living in Balentine. Neither did he consult the sorority women of Colvin. It's hard to believe these women of Colvin. It's hard to believe these women would ask Brodeur to vote against them having representation.

But he didn't take that into account. Does he, a cabinet member, think the table would be too crowded with another chair.

He isn't alone in his shortsightedness. The senate themselves went against the recommendation of the committee they set up to report on the issue by downing the vote. What is the point of studying the question at all if you don't listen?

The cabinet isn't a club. By denying a seat to the Panhellenic Council they were telling 600 women they didn't need to be represented.

Common logic follows, folks, that if sororities shouldn't be represented, neither should fraternities, thereby eliminating another 1,000 students from being represented. Keep the trend going and you've soon eliminated off-campus students. Dorms would be the next to be denied representation.

Where would that leave the cabinet and the senate?

Right, empty. Not every group deserves representation. But this one did.

Lost in two farcical votes and an hour and a half of rigamortale, the true issue became clouded and lost.

It should have been left up to the students to decide who deserves to be on the cabinet. Instead it was never let off the ground.

As Barnum and Bailey would say, "It's time to take the makeup off, guys."

Letters for the circular file

"...and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength."

The great commandment, Chapter 12, verse 30.

It implies that there are four different influences that effect any person's behavior.

It also implies that these influences must be kept in balance in some manner. In this case by subordinating them to some outside influence, God.

By implying a need for balance, it also implies the possibility of imbalance.

I believe that to be true, I believe that in our society today there is a grave imbalance between those four factors, heart, soul, mind and body.

Take the heart for example. In modern myth, it is used as the symbol for our emotional side. Presently the only 'way of life' that is attempting to give the emotional side of life consideration is that way of life portrayed by the Granola people, the Clam-Shellies. What they seem to say is that only what we feel is right. They suppress the other sides.

Take the soul, the spiritual side. In case you haven't noticed, there has been a steady increase in the growth of Evangelical and Pentacostal Christian groups, not to mention quasi-christian organizations such as the Moonies. This is most apparent in the popularity of such TV programs as the PTL Club. Unfortunately this is resulting in a suppression of the mind, something that I feel is incombatale with true Christianity, but nevertheless true in this case.

Take the mind, the intellect. The present dominant way of thought in this country is what can be called the 'liberal ethos.' The belief that all the answers are there to be found, if we only ask the right questions. This belief, or method if you will, distrusts emotions, distrusts spirituality, because they cannot be questioned; they can only be experienced. They cannot be seen; they can only be felt.

Take strength, the physical side of us, the body. It is harder to locate any one way of thought or way of life that emphasizes this but it is perhaps the most evident in our society. Our emphasis on the 'good time'. The overwhelming need that many of us seem to have for the physical enjoyments over the intellectual, emotional or spiritual. The bombardment in the media, that emphasizes how 'sexy' this or that product is. 'Use Old Spice and you'll have not one, but two girl-friends (playmates?) before the end of this commercial.'

There is a real need in our society to try and balance these factors.

Too much emotion, and you get violence and war.

Too much spirituality and you have an inability to deal with the world, and perhaps a certain intolerance.

Too much intellect, and you find yourself an empty shell with all the right answers but no reason for those answers. An empty shell that can only be filled by feeling rather than thinking.

Too much emphasis on the physical. And you just might find yourself without any purpose for life. With answers or reasons.

Balance, the Golden Mean, that is the only way to have a meaningful life.

Billy Joel for every mood

To the Editor:

I would like this opportunity to reply to Susan Day's review of Billy Joel's newest album, "Glass Houses."

First of all Susan, I would like to challenge your rather unfounded assumption that all singers/songwriters have a standard image that should be adhered to. If you would care to go back and play your stack of worn Billy Joel albums, you may remember "Piano Man," his third album, "The Stranger" was totally unfamiliar to the previous one-no more banjo, substitute Richie Cannata. "52nd Street" is very different from his others, almost alarmingly so at first, as he implemented his band even more often, and incorporated impressive studio bands sounds brilliantly. "Glass Houses" is also very different. What I call his real style, his true attribute as an artist is this versatility. I can brag a Billy Joel album to fit my every mood, which suits me much better than 20 Barry Manilow songs that sound like the last 20.

As for your attacks on "Glass Houses"-you want symbolism? Try breaking the standard set by a ferocious and competitive record industry. When they want one thing, give them what you want, even if it's a satiric version of what they expect. If Billy Joel is in the glass house of recording fame (recording mind you, no TV specials with Lonnie Anderson, no movies) he is certainly throwing stones.

"Sometimes a Fantasy" is not "punk" as you so slanderously refer to it, but a parody of it. Perhaps you didn't catch the distinctive 50s rhythmic background. At worst, it's merely an integration of the two most notorious rock sounds in history-50s and new wave.

As for your petty attack on his French, being a four-year French student with French relatives, I found his accent most impressive. I thought it was a very beautiful and different effect.

Sincerely,
Dianne McLaughlin

Six-day week opposed

To the Editor:

Dear, dear, dear, Mr. McCarthy,

Your proposal for a six-day school week has absolutely confirmed and reinforced my belief that the administration of this campus is out of touch with the student body and incompetent in managing campus affairs. Did you ever really think what a six-day week would mean? If you think the alcohol problem is bad now, just wait until this proposal is passed and goes into effect next semester.

One of the most popular excuses for drinking is to relieve pressure. Believe you me, a six-day week will so intensify the pressure on this campus that one can conclude that drinking will inevitably increase.

Your decision is going to cut the throats of everyone. To illustrate this point, let me present the typical day of a college student. Most students attend classes all day (I bet you didn't know that), and at the end of the day a little rest is usually needed to recuperate from a series of lectures. Many students, including myself, must work every night just to pay the bills and this leaves very little studying time during the week day. Much of my studying is done on weekends which makes it very convenient for me to stay on top of things. A six-day week would completely destroy any hope of staying caught up and there is just no way I could survive that kind of situation.

I think you'll find, Mr. McCarthy, that most students won't stand for this kind of incompetence. As far as I'm concerned, you're reaching for my jugular, and I won't stay to let you cut it. I will transfer. This isn't a threat, it's a promise!

Irresponsibility charged

To the Editor:

This is in reply to the irresponsible journalism in the Tuesday edition of the Maine Campus. I am referring to Mike Lowry's editorial entitled "Acting Like Children." First off, where did Lowry get his facts from? He left out quite a bit of information which surrounds the incident. Secondly, when did God turn over his power of judgement solely to you, Mr. Lowry?

It is obvious from the tone of the editorial that Mr. Lowry does not believe individuals should stand up for themselves. It so happens that the brothers of Theta Chi are very proud of their house, as I am sure all other fraternity brothers are of their houses and all are willing to uphold its pride regardless of who is causing the trouble.

You say the brothers of Theta Chi and Sigma Phi Epsilon are irresponsible children for what occurred, yet the Maine Campus prints pictures of graffiti with anti-war slogans in the paper. I see the Campus condones graffiti on public buildings these days. Or is it you people just wait for the opportunity to print inaccurate stories about those terrible men in fraternities?

Respectfully yours,
Donald S. Murray
Brother, Theta Chi Fraternity

Lowry's accuracy attacked

To the Editor:

In reference to Mike Lowry's editorial April 1, his journalistic ideals and practices are certainly an April's Fool. When I was enrolled in JR 31 a few years back, we were told to be sure to check all the sources close to the story, to make sure all the facts are correct and that all the facts are included. Did Lowry follow such procedures?

This is just another case of an eager journalist foaming at the mouth to write his story before he gathers in all the facts from all the individuals involved. Did he ask any Theta Chi or Sig Ep brothers what happened? Did he bother to see if any other instances occurred which led to this event? If he did, he's probably saving it for his award-winning novel.

I'm not condoning actions during this event. Every Theta Chi and Sig Ep brother involved realizes it was stupid and agreed to settle differences in a mature manner. The thing that irks the hell out of me is this irresponsible journalism.

I think Mr. Lowry should either stick to writing articles about winning stuffed pandas for his girlfriend, or start to act and write in a professional manner. It is obvious by Mr. Lowry's talents that a newspaper job in a big city awaits him—as a copy boy.

Respectfully yours,
Dave Caron

Sunburn season

"Cabin fever" is history. We can loosen our winter coats and breathe a little. Maybe do some running outdoors—catch that elusive sun.

"Students in the winter months are restless depressed," said Dr. Woods, Director of Cutler Health Center. "Now they're restless excited."

What's "going around" during the spring?

Flu is on the decline. Woods said. Viral sore throat and strep throat are on the incline. Temperature changes make people susceptible to infection. That's a good point. Maybe stripping down to shorts and T-shirts isn't the best idea when the mercury soars above 40.

Between now and finals people will be in with nervous stomachs and headaches, Woods said, this will be the result of stress as the countdown to May 16 gets underway.

During the same period red and peeling faces will doubtlessly appear at the reception desk at Cutler asking for a cure for sunburn. "There is no cure," Woods said. The prevention is moderation. "Cold packs to ease the distress will help," he said. "But don't put on every ointment in your friend's medicine cabinet."

By the way: All those people who didn't go to Florida or Bermuda over spring break can take some vindictive pleasure in learning that the health center has already had students come in suffering from sunburn contracted during migrations south.

Senators feel rushed, question role of Ma. in Land Claims case

AUGUSTA—It appears that quick approval of the Indian Land Claims settlement proposal by the Maine Legislature may be doomed.

Only five of the majority Republicans who control the Senate voted in favor of accepting the proposal today at their caucus before the full senate convened.

Republican leaders had earlier predicted that the 300,000-acre settlement would be approved.

But Assistant Senate Majority Leader Richard Pierce of Waterville said yesterday senators felt rushed.

The Legislature agreed to meet for two days this week to consider the proposal.

But today, Senator Samuel Collins, cochairman of the special committee that approved the package, found himself answering the same questions in the caucus that came up at Tuesday's committee meeting.

For example, Senator Roland Sutton of South Paris asked why the Indians were not suing Massachusetts instead of Maine, because their land was allegedly taken when Maine was part of Massachusetts, before 1820.

Collins responded that Maine relieved Massachusetts of those responsibilities when Maine became a state.

The full Senate began debating the measure at 11:30 yesterday morning.

Trains hit the tracks, bus, subway workers continue negotiations

NEW YORK—The strike against the country's largest commuter railroad is over—quite unexpectedly.

However, the separate strike against New York City's bus and subway system continues.

Union officials for the trackmen striking the Long Island Railroad made the surprise announcement yesterday that their members would return to work that afternoon.

A spokesman for the metropolitan transportation authority said trains probably will be running again today.

The trackmen walked off the job Tuesday morning—several hours after New York City's bus and subway workers went out on strike.

Fiberglass in Maine's transportation building tied to health problems

AUGUSTA—The Maine State Employees' Association has demanded that all fiberglass ductwork be replaced in the state's transportation department building.

Recent tests have shown that there was evidence of fiberglass particles in the air in the building's offices.

And Harry Starbranch, lawyer for the state employees, said the fiberglass in the building's insulation and ventilation system must be removed.

He said there may be a link between the fiberglass and all the health problems being experienced by many of the building's 600 employees.

Governor Joseph Brennan ordered an investigation of the building's air.

New 'marijuana tea' could cure glaucoma

ATLANTA—Two Georgia Tech researchers say a "marijuana tea," or water extract, may be useful in treating glaucoma without making users high.

Drs. Howard Deutsch and Leon Zalkow said the extract has been shown to dramatically lower pressure inside the eyes of rabbits. Glaucoma raises intraocular pressure in the human eye and impairs vision.

Zalkow said the extract does not contain THC, the active substance in marijuana that causes a high.

Zalkow said that while the extract must be tested on primates and humans, current tests indicate it works twice as well in lowering intraocular pressure in rabbits as does marijuana with THC.

Further tests still must be made to determine if the extract has other side effects. But Zalkow said all other drugs on the market now have "undeniably serious side effects."

According to Zalkow, the testing on rabbits will continue for about a year. Then screening will be done with primates, and if that's successful, the same will be done with humans.

About 17 states, including Georgia, have legalized the therapeutic use of marijuana for some patients suffering from cancer and glaucoma.

Youth admits his guilt in two death accounts

SKOWHEGAN—A young man pleaded guilty to two counts of manslaughter stemming from a fatal automobile accident in Skowhegan last September. Timothy Washburn, 19, of Skowhegan, entered his pleas Tuesday in Superior Court in Skowhegan. He was sentenced to five years in the Maine Correctional Center, with all but two years and 10 months suspended.

Washburn was the driver of a car in which two passengers, Michael Merrow of Skowhegan and Shawn Dostie of East Haven, Connecticut, both 18, were killed last Sept. 15 when the car left the road and turned over.

Prosecutors said they were prepared to offer proof showing that Washburn was operating under the influence of alcohol at the time.

The baseball strike begins; Zimmer wields axe

The Major Leaguers who put down the bat Tuesday began picking up the tab Wednesday. It's only coincidental that tab is bat spelled backwards.

With all expenses cut off by their clubs after the announcement that no more exhibition games would be played, the players had to pay their own way. Some just milled around and talked of going home.

Others, like the San Diego Padre players in Yuma, Arizona began doubling up in rooms. The Boston Red Sox in Winter Haven, Florida even worked out voluntarily. The Atlanta Braves, in West Palm Beach, Florida, said they also would continue to work out. Their player representative, Phil Niekro, said they would double up in rooms and those with money would lend some to those who were financially strapped.

The Boston Red Sox trimmed their Major League training roster to 27 players Wednesday by sending nine rookies to the minor leagues. Headed back for the farm are pitchers John Tudor, Win Remmerswaal, Joel Finch and Keith MacWhorter...catcher Dave Schmidt...infielder Dave Stapleton and outfielders Garry Hancock, Sam Brown and Reid Nichols. Also returned to the minors were young catchers Roger Lafrancois and John Lickert, who have been helping out the parent club. Two more players will have to go to reach the regular season roster limit of 25.

Stapleton was the International League's Most Valuable Player at Pawtucket last year, and had been having a great spring. He was one of the top hitters in camp with a .486 batting average in 14 exhibition games. It may come as no consolation to Stapleton, but Manager Don Zimmer says it was a "very tough" decision to send him down.

The cuts left the Sox with ten pitchers, three catchers, ten infielders and four outfielders. The infielders include Carl Yastrzemski, who also is available to play the outfield.

Veteran Red Sox catcher Bob Montgomery apparently has had to end his career because of arm trouble. But he'll be starting a new line of work soon. Montgomery was named as a sports announcer for Boston Radio Station WITS, the flagship for the Red Sox Network throughout New England. Station President Joe Scallan says Montgomery will be groomed to become a play-by-play announcer.

Swimmers shatter nine marks

Nine school records were set during the 1979-80 campaign that culminated in a third straight New England Swimming and Diving Championship for the UMO women's swimming team.

According to updated records released Wednesday by Coach Jeff Wren, sophomore Cary Bryden (Bristol, Vt.), set new standards in the 50 and 100-yard freestyle events, and along with

senior Nancy Kurt (Charlotte, Vt.), freshman Debora Urv

(Caribou), and senior captain Eileen Sherlock (Pawtucket, R.I.), established a new 200 yard freestyle relay record. Kurt set a new mark for the 1650-yard freestyle, and junior Beth Carone (Marblehead, Mass.) swam to a new mark in the 200-yard backstroke.

Diver Tricia Redden, a junior from West Hartford, Conn., set three diving records during the campaign, while senior diver Patti Ward set a new mark in the fourth diving event.

Students and faculty debate draft

by Gail Clough
Staff writer

Two students and two faculty members argued over the pros and cons of a military draft last night at a debate held in the Bangor lounge of the Memorial Union.

Robin Hartford, a student who served in the Navy before enrolling at UMO, said the country needs some kind of military draft to maintain order. He said when the draft ended in 1973, the quality of military personnel diminished. The work load increased, many skilled people were overworked, and more unskilled men were assigned jobs for which they weren't qualified, Hartford said.

"I think we need a draft and I think we need it with no deferments and a universal conscription," he added.

Lynn Bradshaw Hull argued the country should concentrate on alternatives to draft registration.

Hull said the volunteer army is substandard because there has been no effort to attract people into the army, and once an individual has enlisted, he is not motivated to continue his military service.

Associate Professor of History Richard Blanke gave his idea of the reason many students oppose the draft. "The draft is resented by young people today primarily because it's inconvenient," he said. Many students have a narrow minded and selfish attitude towards the possibility of draft registration, Blanke added.

Blanke said he had no sympathy for the argument that the younger generation would have to take on a job the older generation can no longer do.

Philosophy Department Chairman Doug Allen said he is basically against the draft. There has never been a registration without a draft, and there has never been a draft without a war, he said.

Allen said two events—the crisis in Iran and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan—prompted President Carter to call for registration for the draft. Allen also said Carter is successfully using these international crises to boost his campaign for re-election.

Allen said the country should not support harsh dictators of foreign countries referring to the Shah of Iran and change its economic priorities by becoming less dependent on other countries for energy.
